Linking the AMC strategy to its core business functions

The AMC supports the National Registration and Accreditation Scheme, and its core business functions relate to the key objectives of the National Scheme. These functions, which are set out in the AMC’s Constitution, include:

- to improve health through advancing the quality and delivery of medical education and training associated with the provision of health services in Australia and New Zealand
- to act as an external accreditation entity for the purposes of the Health Practitioner Regulation National Law
- to develop accreditation standards, policies and procedures for medical programs of study based predominantly in Australia and New Zealand and for assessment of international medical graduates for registration in Australia
- to assess programs of study based predominantly in Australia and New Zealand leading to general or specialist registration of the graduates of those programs to practise medicine in Australia to determine whether the programs meet approved accreditation standards, and to make recommendations for improvement of those programs
- to assess education providers based predominantly in Australia and New Zealand that provide programs leading to registration of the graduates to practise medicine in Australia, to determine whether the providers meet approved accreditation standards
- to assess other countries’ examining and accrediting authorities to decide whether persons who successfully complete the examinations or programs of study conducted or accredited by those authorities have the knowledge, clinical skills and professional attributes necessary to practise medicine in Australia
- to assess or oversee the assessment of the knowledge, clinical skills and professional attributes of overseas qualified medical practitioners seeking registration to practise medicine in Australia
- to assess the case for recognition of medical specialties
- to advise and make recommendations to regulatory authorities and government
- to work with international health, accreditation and testing authorities and agencies to bring about improvement in the furtherance of these objects.

Part of the purpose of the AMC’s strategy is to strengthen the linkage between its core business functions and its operating environment by taking into account community need, policy settings, and by promoting organisational responsiveness to change. For example, the strategy’s emphasis on promoting indigenous health is a direct response to the gap in health outcomes between indigenous and non-indigenous people in Australia and New Zealand. The imperative of health equity has resulted in the AMC progressively introducing Indigenous health and cultural competence accreditation standards across the medical education continuum. The AMC has also added Aboriginal, Torres Strait Islander and Māori assessors to its accreditation assessment teams and committees, and contributed to changes to codes and professional standards. More recently, medical schools and colleges have started delivering Indigenous curriculum material and introducing mechanisms to recruit and support
Indigenous students and trainees, partly in response to these changes. It is by closing the circle from community need, through AMC standards and policies, to practitioner education and capability development, that the AMC aims to achieve a positive impact on health outcomes.

The AMC’s governance structure reflects its core business functions. However it is also designed to capture a range of views from inside and outside the profession, and to allow a flexible and responsive configuration of AMC resources in response to strategic priorities (see below).
